INTRODUCTION

This bibliography describes the bulk of the literature published serially in the British Isles until 1900 devoted exclusively or as a prominent aim to the finance, management or operation of railways, that is to say all forms of locomotion on rails; with the exception of publications consisting solely of time tables. It includes journals and directories, and also the more ephemeral material such as newspapers and even broadsheets. It does not cover the large and very important body of material published in periodicals not specifically devoted to the subject of railways, and it provides only a general guide to the subject matter of the publications it describes, and does not attempt the listing of individual articles.

The historian of railways is already familiar with the material which is to be found in daily newspapers of the quality of the Times and the Morning post, and with the London weeklies, especially Punch and the Illustrated London News. He will also have consulted the general engineering periodicals, the Engineer and Engineering particularly, together with the organs of the engineering institutions, of which the most important are the Institutions of Civil and Mechanical engineers. He knows that for the early period the Mechanics' magazine has interesting and important material, and for his railway press he will probably depend solely on Herapath's and the Railway Times. He will then be content.

It is the aim of the present work to reveal the enormous abundance of lesser material, much of which survives only in a single copy in the British Museum, some of which has been found to be in folded sheets unopened. Timetables have had to be omitted because out of the colossal bulk Bradshaw's alone were worth description, and their bibliographical history has already been well charted in Charles E. Lee's "Centenary of Bradshaw." Government publications have been omitted, as these can be traced in the indexes to Parliamentary Papers, and the organs of bodies such as missions and trade unions not essentially devoted to railway operation have also been left out.
It is thus a bibliography of the independent railway press, and does not even include the official publications of companies, which there would be no point in describing. Of this press there is still considerable ignorance. Richard S. Lambert in "The Railway King" \(^{165}\), published in 1884 stated as a fact that the number of railway journals rose at the height of the mania of 1845 from three to "twenty"; the chart at the end of this volume shows this to have been a mere guess, but it is still in excess of the popular estimate. The prevailing ignorance is due to one of the accidents of bibliography, for most of the newspapers of the mania period survive only in the British Museum, which has no subject index to them, and a catalogue which does not record even subtitles. The first edition (by Charles Mitchell) of the Newspaper Press Directory is very useful, since he knew many of the railway editors; but it was published in March 1846 when the mania was subsiding and many of the newspapers had disappeared; subsequent editions are of little value, being inaccurate and incomplete in common with a number of rival commercial lists. The "Times handlist" to 1920 is merely a chronological rearrangement of the British Museum catalogue.

All the searching is now made much easier by the publication of B.U.C.O.P. (British union-catalogue of periodicals. 4 vols. 1953-\(^{6}\)) which records locations in libraries for most of the items. When a periodical appears in B.U.C.O.P. I have prefixed the symbol # to the title (usually the original one if it changed) under which it appears in that work; similarly $ has been used in front of the title under which it appears (if at all) in the World "list of Scientific Periodicals (3rd ed. 1953), usually that current in 1900. Where the item is in neither one or two locations have been supplied in the symbolism used by B.U.C.O.P.; and one or two minor amendments to the locations recorded in B.U.C.O.P. (which often copied inaccurate sources, notably the old British Museum newspaper catalogue) have been recorded.

The circulations of newspapers have been calculated for each year up to 1855 by reference to the stamp duty returns published in various Parliamentary Papers from 1851 to 1856, especially 1852 (42) XXVIII. 497. The duty was complicated in its operation, and the calculations have had to take account of various anomalies and changes in the law during the period. The circulations estimated for each issue, which I have placed after the symbol $, can only be a rough estimate, since any proprietor could retain stocks of stamped paper for weeks, but over a number of years the figures are a very reliable guide to trends in circulations; the figure for any one year can be taken as a reasonable approximation and errors are not likely to be large. The circulations are also shown in diagrammatic form. The figures before 1837 seem not to be available, and after 1855 they represent only the postal circulation, since the compulsory stamp duty was abolished from October of that year, so that they become of little use.

There is little that needs to be said about the plan of the bibliography. It consists, after the introduction of three parts, an alphabetical list of titles, an alphabetical index of persons, places, corporate bodies and titles not forming main entries in the text, and a pair of diagrams giving a chronological conspectus and a view of the comparative circulations of newspapers during the early period.

Cataloguing rules, though good servants, cannot be followed slavishly in the description of complex periodicals and newspapers, and many deviations from conventional practice have been introduced, e.g. the placing of the whole collation, including that of individual volumes, immediately after the heading (justified by the vital importance of the collation); and the placing of dates (years first) before numbers and parts, which is definitely an aid to quick finding. Numbers of the parts have been placed before numbers of the volumes; this is strictly logical, for a volume has no status as a volume until the last of its parts has been published. The pagination of the completed volume is added at the end, not only as a guide to the amount of material contained in it and to indicate whether copies are complete, but also to enable any volume-page reference to be dated at least approximately. Details of the make-up of the volume are taken from the title page whenever possible, and the deficiencies supplied from the parts in curved parentheses. When all the details have to be taken from the parts, the volume number is enclosed in parentheses as a warning. Square brackets are used only to supply information not found in the periodical, or in the particular volume being described.

The titles of newspapers are taken from the captions, and only if it differs or adds information is it quoted. Details of printer and publisher are reduced to a briefer modernised form from the verbose legal phraseology of the colophon, and the source is not normally stated unless it is not the colophon.
Size is given to the nearest inch (no greater accuracy is feasible) as a rough guide to the quantity of the material. A periodical issued in parts intended to be bound into a volume is described as a journal if issued in wrappers, and a news-journal if without. Separate items issued with stiff covers are described as "volumes", those with paper covers as "booklets". It is hoped that the meanings of all other terms and abbreviations will be obvious. A set of abbreviations has been specially devised to describe the subject-matter of the contents, e.g. News (law, parl.) means reports of legal cases and of the proceedings of parliament on railways, including the Committee on Railway Bills. Tables of shares with prices are noted, together with the interval at which the returns are recorded if not the same as that of the periodical; similarly with traffic returns. These abbreviations are listed at the front.

It is hoped that this detailed bibliography will prove more satisfactory than existing tools; the recent Tentative check-list of early European railway literature, by Daniel C. Haskell (Harvard, Mass. 1955) contains less than 10% of the periodical material up to 1848 which is its terminus, simply because it is basically an American union cataogue.

At the end of 1959 the deficiency in the bibliography of British railways is belatedly to be made good, with the publication by Allen & Unwin of George Ottley's classified bibliography of the whole field to 1959. This was to have been published lacking the sections for periodicals, directories and government publications, but the present writer has undertaken to supply the lack, and to list the entire range of serial literature on railways to the present day (interpreted much more widely than the present work allows) which will amount to some 1,000 titles, to be described with the minimum of detail. That will provide the final subject index to this detailed bibliography.

T.p.: Bradshaw’s railway manual, shareholders’ guide, and official directory for 1863, containing the history and financial position of every company, British, foreign, and colonial; statistics, powers, and other data to the close of the year; railway interest in Parliament, etc, accompanied by an alphabetical arrangement of the whole administrative and executive staffs in the three kingdoms; illustrated with ... railway maps of the British Isles, and the Continent of Europe, India, &c. Vol.XV. London: published by W.J. Adams, Bradshaw’s general railway publication offices, 59,Fleet Street,E.C.; [and sold by] Effingham Wilson,11, Royal Exchange, E.C. Manchester: Henry Blacklock & Co. 47, Brown Street, also at Bradshaw’s railway publication offices... Liverpool... Birmingham... Sheffield... Edinburgh... Glasgow... Dublin; and of all booksellers. 1863.

The exact addresses of Bradshaw’s offices very.

Henry Blacklock’s address changes in 1868 to "Albert Square".

From 1878 a slight change in scope is noted by a variation in the wording of the title: "... containing the history and financial position of every British railway; also of the principal canal and rolling stock companies; with statistics..." AND "...kingdoms; to which is added copious information relating to foreign and colonial lines; illustrated...

Compare preface, 1878,p.xv: " Owing to its increasing bulk it has been found necessary... to confine ourselves strictly to the railways, canals, and rolling stock companies of Great Britain[and Ireland] -adding thereto only such other information appertaining to foreign railways, as we know the English investor to be interested in...

In practice the reduction is small.

Contains 3 sections, United Kingdom; Continental; Indian, American and Colonial, subdivided (Railways arranged alphabetically in each) followed by list of auxiliary associations; and Appendix (till 1873 & in 1875 paged separately) of parliamentary and statistical information, including a list of recent working agreements (with terms in detail) and a full index of personal names.

General index"(i.e. full table of contents, including the names of all railways which are entered in their alphabetical place, etc.) at the beginning. From 1878 this is followed by a "Supplementary index" of railways leased to or worked by other Companies and therefore not entered under their own names in the directory.

London ...

T.p., 1897: Duncan's manual of Tramways, Omnibuses & Electric Railways, containing ...

Directory of companies financed by British capital; British first, then foreign, alphabetically. Lists directors, officers, accounts.

[T.J. Whiting, the printer of tickets, acquired it from W.W. Duncan, and extended its scope to include a few bus companies and London & Liverpool electric railways; but allowed the standard of accuracy and completeness to decline, so that not all the details were revised for each edition. It would appear from the signature "T.J.W." to the prefaces that T.J. Whiting edited it himself.]

[1878] [2nd. edition].

then Duncan's Manual of Tramways, Omnibuses and Electric Railways 1894-1905.

Cover, 1877: Duncan’s tramway manual & map of tramways in London, 1877

T.p., 1879: Manual of British and foreign tramway companies, containing abstracts of accounts, traffic tables of the principal companies, together with maps shewing the tramway routes in the various cities and towns. 1879.
Compiled and published by W. W. Duncan, Stockholder and tramway share dealer, Telegraph St., London, E.C. To be obtained at Mr. Duncan’s offices, or from Fredc. C. Mathieson, Bartholomew House, London, E.C. Price 5s., post free.

Directory of companies financed by British capital, with lists of officers and financial information. Compiled by William Wallace Duncan, for whose subsequent career see under the later title.

Preface, 1877: "In consequence of the large amount of business in these securities that has passed through my hands since the introduction of Tramways into this Kingdom, I have been able to compile this Annual with an accuracy which I hope and believe will make it valuable as a Book of Reference to Investors. At the same time, although I have been obliged to put much of the material at my command in a condensed form, I shall always be most happy to supply additional information to those who may apply to me for it. I have confined [this] edition to Tramways in the United Kingdom, but in future issues I hope to include at least those of the Foreign Companies which are quoted in our Stock Exchange Official List."

Supplement to Vol. IV has title: A classified list of all patents for inventions granted in the United Kingdom during the year 1847: alphabetically arranged, according to the names of the patentees. To which is added an index to the various subjects to which the patents refer. Compiled by the editors of the Patent Journal. London: pub. at the Patent Journal Office, 89, Chancery Lane, and 17, Cross Street, Manchester. 1848.

[No more t.ps.]

Later captions vary; that of the last number reads: The patent journal and inventors' magazine... pub. at the Patent Journal off., 89, Chancery Lane, London. Sold at 2, Bennett's Hill, Birmingham; 11, Market St., Manchester; and by all booksellers in Town and Country; also by Galignani, Paris; Baudry, Vienna; and Mán & Co., New York. The last few numbers ed. by Charles Barlow alone.

Introductory address: "It has long been a subject of general complaint... that there is no work extant which gives abstracts, or accounts, of the Specifications of all the Patents granted. The existing periodicals... confine themselves to the description of a few only, whilst the Registrations are wholly neglected... To supply these defects will be the primary object..."

Contains material of outstanding importance for the history of railway engineering, e.g. an illustrated description of the original "Crampton" locomotive. Rather more than half the patents of these years were connected with railways.

Charles Mitchell in the Newspaper Press Directory, 1846:
"This journal commenced with a series of compendious time tables, and has gradually become enlarged as a railway, and subsequently as a general newspaper. It also gives engravings, &c., as a bonus to subscribers. Notwithstanding its popularity there can be no doubt, that had the vast sums which have been expended on presents been employed in securing literary talent, this journal would have acquired a much higher fame, and a much more solid success."

Our Christmas farewell (1849): "The vocation of the Railway Chronicle is gone. The time was when railway shareholders listened to words of good and honest counsel and were guided by them. Now they cannot. [It] did all in its power to guide the minds of railway directors and railway managers in those principles of practical management in the affairs of railways which private individuals apply daily to their own vocation in life. Diligent attention to the details of railway carrying as if it were but a private business - limitation of capital to the lowest point as a chief element in the security of profits - study of economy in locomotive power - assiduous promotion of traffic, esp. local traffic and short traffic - patient and steady earning in goods traffic of those profits formerly thrown away on carriers - non-interference of directors in the business of officers - responsibility of the principal officers for the whole details of their department, - all these doctrines, now tardily admitted as the only methods of doing railway work with advantage, these and many more were the subjects advocated by the Railway Chronicle in happier times, - with what success the event has shown. It exposed the Carrier Abuses ... the schemes of government interference. It advocated the introduction of expansive working in Locomotive Engines ... now systematically adopted. It advocated Cheap Lines, even with worse gradients and curves - and the whole of the later railways were constructed on that system. Against the mania of 1845, The Railway Chronicle raised its warning voice ... the folly of competing lines ... the fallacy of the "direct and independent" system ... the absurdity of branch lines."

Preface to Vol. I: "We have never withheld the issue of Second Editions ... the cost even of an Express Train from the North ... or of a special courier from Paris."

[Originally represented Liverpool interests, but acquired by George Hudson.] Opposed the powers of the Board of Trade.

For 1848. 1847. [Dec.?] 192, cxviii - cvii p. (and Wilson's Nov. cat. 12p.)

T.p. for 1845 (Tuck): The railway directory for 1845.
Containing the names of the directors and principal officers of the railways in Great Britain, derived from authentic sources. By Henry Tuck, author of the "Railway Shareholders' Manual", &c. London: Railway Times off., 122, Fleet St., Effingham Wilson, [no.11, South-East corner], Royal Exchange, 1845.
The covers and t.pages of vols. for subsequent years are similar, but the cover for 1847 only adds " Price two shillings."
The vol. for 1845 (anonymou edition) has a different t.p.: The railway directory for 1845, containing the names of the directors and principal officers of the railways in Great Britain and Ireland, including those for which acts were obtained last session. Derived from authentic sources. The original and genuine edition, price sixpence. London: pub. at the Railway Times off., 122, Fleet St. 1844.
[The authenticity of the Tuck edition is beyond question, and the imprint of this edition, which was not advertised by the Railway Times, or deposited in the copyright libraries, must therefore be false. If it is the original version (possibly by John Robertson, who left the editorship of the Railway Times in 1844 to found the Railway Record) it was presumably suppressed before publication, and subsequently printed and circulated privately. The Bodleian has a copy of unknown provenance annotated in Ms. (apparently by Henry Hyde Clarke, editor of the Railway Record, &c., whose name is written on the cover). No other copy is known.]

[Haskell records (No.3027) another item from the Baker library: The railway directory; being a list of the names and addresses of the directors and officers of the railways of Great Britain and Ireland: including those authorized in the session of 1845. London [1845] 4 p.1.,110p. This must be a different work, as it purports to give addresses. No copy has been traced in Britain.]
(The RAILWAY DIRECTORY for 1845-48. 1844[?]-1847) [contd.]

A directory of the railways of the British Isles. One page (or less) devoted to each railway; railways arranged in arbitrary order, with alphabetical index of railways at the end. Names of principal officials only included under each, and there is no index to their names.

[Henry Hyde Clarke, 1815-35, the editor & proprietor, was a prolific author and journalist, and contributed to the Railway magazine (Herapath's journal, &c) from 1835 to 1894. He had planned and surveyed the Glasgow & South Western and the West Cumberland railways in 1836, and set up the London and County Bank in the same year. He edited The RAILWAY REGISTER and The RAILWAY PORTFOLIO, which also ceased in April 1847. He later became a telegraph engineer and developed railways in India and the East, travelling much. He was a distinguished philologist] and orientalist and became a Vice President both of the Royal Historical Society and of the Royal Anthropological Institute. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Statistical Society and Treasurer of the Newspaper Press Fund. Till 1849 July 21 caption states: "Edited by John Robertson, M.A.", then "Established" by him.

No.1 contains an explanation of the circumstances that led John Robertson to resign the editorship of the RAILWAY TIMES, q.v. [to found what was in effect another London & Birmingham organ.] "He will continue, as there, to expose charlatany wherever it may be found, to uphold the true interests of railway proprietors, whatever may be the popular feeling of the day; to aid good management; and to defeat the schemes of those who pursue a course of policy adverse either to the interests of the shareholders or the just claims of the public."
Motto:"Integrity. Impartiality. Independence."
[Newspaper Press Directory, 1856: "Distinguished by its correct and ample details of all that regards both domestic and foreign railways. The information... respecting departmental statistics and the intricacies of railway law on the Continent, obtained for it a well-earned reputation, which it still maintains." ]

[Its quality deteriorated much in later years and an attempt by the editor Bernard Brown to make it into a forum for the grievances of railway servants did nothing to revive its popularity.]

Advocates the protection of vested interests from all kinds of government control.

[Post Office railway directory for 1847: "Circulated chiefly among the railway offices and capitalists."]

Address to No. XXVI: "The pages of the Railway Register have often been supposed to contain the authoritative expression of opinion on particular subjects ... but the Railway Register was projected and has been received as an independent organ for the promulgation of the views of all members of the railway interest ... We may observe that the second volume ... involves an outlay of £1,000, and that other volumes have cost large sums, which the ordinary rate of subscription would be insufficient to repay."

Locations: See B.U.C.O.P. All the copies are imperfect in many respects, and usually lack a large portion of the important advertisement sections, but the Bodleian Library has Vols. I & II as issued by the publisher in complete cased volumes lacking nothing except the wrappers. The copy at University College, London is lost.

Title in caption 1889-91: The railway times and tramway chronicle.

[Edited at first by Joseph Clinton Robertson, one of the founders of the Mechanics' magazine, then by John Robertson, of Aberdeen, M.A. of that University, on its staff from the beginning to Mar. 30, 1844 (except for a few weeks in 1841); after which he founded the RAILWAY RECORD, whose first number (Apr. 13) contains a lengthy explanation of the quarrel with the proprietors that led to his resignation: "The editor...for some time past has felt that the position of the parties to whom the Railway Times belongs, [directors of the London & Birmingham, &c], has rendered the faithful discharge of his editorial duties a matter of some difficulty, and of considerable unpleasantness; while there can be no question that the general knowledge of the fact, that the proprietors of the paper were professionally, or commercially, connected with particular...companies induced a suspicion that favouritism was allowed to influence the discussion of certain topics."

[By founding the Railway record he created another London & Birmingham organ.]

Motto below caption: "Lord Bacon saith truly, there are three things which make a nation great and prosperous, —a fertile soil, busy workshops, and easy conveyance for men and commodities from one place to another; to which, let me add knowledge and freedom — Bishop Hall."

1837 Oct.29: "A complete digest of domestic [esp.provincial] and foreign intelligence... The politics of the people".

[Post office railway directory for 1847, p.201: "Advocates Great Western & Eastern Counties interests; was formerly the London & Birmingham organ. Has much circulation in news-rooms and public institutions."]

[Was the most respected railway newspaper of the early period, though it lacked the solid engineering basis of Herapath's... It was the most pungent critic of George Hudson.]

Charles Mitchell, in the Newspaper Press Directory, 1846, p.102: "Exhibits much personal knowledge of the directors of companies, and is fearless in pronouncing its opinion where abuse exists. The proceedings in Parliament are closely watched, and the variations in the share market regularly noticed. An enquiry into, and development of Scotch railways, is one of the prominent distinctions of this journal."

"It is our purpose to identify ourselves with the advocacy of direct lines."

Policy, V.1. no.1: "To represent the important and rapidly growing interests of steam, electric, cable and other traction in every country throughout the world. The policy of the paper will be to hold the balance evenly between conflicting interests, but it will steadily advocate development, improvement and advance in every section of railway and tramway undertakings...to introduce to the notice of engineers and others in this country the many improvements both in system and in appliances, which have for some time been successfully operated in other countries... Tramways: lines cannot be worked as economically and satisfactorily by public corporations as by companies... Tramway concessions should be granted free from the many arbitrary restrictions which now too often control them. Railways: [the first]... high-class monthly illustrated journal... It will be our aim... to give the railway companies a medium through which they can attract to their lines the many thousands of tourists that annually visit our shores... Illustrated descriptive accounts of our various lines. We shall also make our paper useful to railway... officials by supplying them with complete and reliable information... including full information as to financial matters... Our columns: We shall regularly record the meetings of companies, the proceedings in Parliament, the registration of new companies, new inventions and the granting of concessions for new lines... animal traction... illustrated biographical notices... legal matters".
